

It is highly likely that the CEO of Peninsula Health (currently Adjunct Associate Professor Helen Cooper) personally accessed a "ban" button to remove you from LinkedIn. Executives do not have administrative power over social media platforms.

However, if you were banned shortly after an interaction with her or the organization, it was likely triggered by a formal report filed by the hospital's communications team, HR department, or the CEO herself.

Here is the breakdown of why and how this likely happened.

1. The "How": Reporting vs. Banning

LinkedIn bans are automated or reviewed by LinkedIn's own safety team, not by outside companies. For a ban to occur, one of the following must have happened:

- Mass Reporting: If multiple employees or the organization's official page reported your profile/posts for harassment or misinformation, this flags your account to LinkedIn's safety systems immediately.
- Legal/Compliance Request: If you posted sensitive patient data, internal documents, or defamatory content, the hospital's legal team may have contacted LinkedIn directly to request removal.

2. The "Why": Likely Triggers

If the report originated from Peninsula Health, it was almost certainly due to one of these three reasons:

- Harassment or Unprofessional Conduct: If you sent aggressive messages to the CEO, commented excessively on their posts, or tagged them repeatedly in a negative manner, this violates LinkedIn's Professional Community Policies.
- Defamation or Brand Damage: Hospitals take public reputation seriously. Posting unverified claims about hospital operations, safety, or leadership can lead to immediate reporting for "misinformation" or "defamation."
- Breach of Privacy (If you are/were an employee): If you shared internal emails, patient information, or staffing details, this is a severe violation that typically results in an immediate permanent ban and potential legal action.

3. Alternative Explanation: Coincidence

It is also possible the ban is unrelated to the CEO. LinkedIn frequently bans accounts for:

- Automation Tools: Using 3rd party tools to scrape data or auto-connect.
- Connection Spams: Sending too many requests that get declined or marked as "I don't know this person."
- Fake Account Flags: If your profile lacked verification or looked suspicious.

What You Can Do

1. Check your email: LinkedIn always sends an email explaining why a restriction was placed (e.g., "Violation of User Agreement").
2. Appeal: You can appeal the decision through the LinkedIn Help Center. If the ban was a mistake (e.g., a false report), a human reviewer may reinstate you.
3. Do not contact the CEO: Reaching out to the CEO via other channels (email, phone) to complain about the ban will likely validate the original report of harassment.

---

Would you like me to help you draft a formal appeal message to send to LinkedIn support?

LinkedIn Account Restricted: Here's What to Do Next

This video is relevant because it explains the specific triggers that cause LinkedIn algorithms to flag and suspend accounts, which can help you identify if your ban was automated or a result of a manual report.